When Jessica Devenish, president of EPN, Inc., approached her mother, Shanna Carnesecca, in 1997 about joining the newest version of the family collections business, Shanna was on board immediately — under one condition.

“I told her I didn’t want be in sales,” Shanna says.

But as she has grown with the business, she just can’t help but constantly market the company’s services to merchants and business owners — putting money back in the local economy.

Now, it’s amazing what has happened to Shanna in the last eight years.

“She’s the one that is trying to get to know the receptionist or the office manager wherever she goes, always trying to build relationships,” Jessica says.

She helped start the first Carnesecca venture into the collections business in 1966 with her husband, Paul, collecting on delinquent accounts and bad checks. After the business was established, she stayed at home to raise her family. During that time she pursued her natural talent for painting Western art and Native American portraits. You can find several of her paintings throughout EPN’s offices and in Shanna’s home.

Now she is one of the “faces” of E Partner Net and CheckNet. She is consistently found in business offices delivering collected money and solving collections needs.

But at her heart, Shanna is a mother and a grandmother. Her handprint is reflected throughout the company her children and husband started — just as we reflect, to some degree or another, the traits of our own mothers. For being a mother and grandmother is Shanna’s first priority.

“We work well together and not all families could say that,” Shanna says. “It’s because we have learned how to work together. We have always encouraged our children to communicate with each other. Disagreements happen, so we work them out face-to-face and then move on.”

Usually the family enjoys the mountains and high plains of Utah where they frequently go off-roading in their Jeeps and camping with the grandchildren. It’s Shanna’s way of building a third generation. Sharing with them the family way of life — and business.
